1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the
 2. various methods of determining the rate of reaction. It is shown
 3. that the most reliable method is the one which involves the
 4. measurement of the change in concentration of one of the
 5. reactants or products. This method is applicable to all
 6. reactions, and is particularly useful in the case of reactions
 7. which are slow. The other methods, such as the measurement
 8. of the change in pressure or volume, are only applicable to
 9. reactions in which there is a change in the number of
 10. moles of gas. The rate of reaction is defined as the change
 11. in concentration of a reactant or product per unit time.
 12. The rate of reaction is a function of the concentration of
 13. the reactants, the temperature, and the presence of a
 14. catalyst. The rate of reaction increases with increasing
 15. concentration of the reactants, with increasing temperature,
 16. and with the presence of a catalyst. The rate of reaction
